USE & PRECAUTIONS

As with all heating devices, the HC20 and HC30 series Heat Controllers should be handled with extreme care and caution. This device should not be turned "ON" or even plugged into an electrical outlet while the heating elements are removed from the tool which they are intended to heat.

The HC20 and HC30 series Heat Controllers can only measure the temperature of (1) heating element (marked in red). The temperatures of the non-thermocoupled elements are assumed based on the temperature reading on the LED display, but should be checked regularly by an alternative device.

The HC20 and HC30 series Heat Controllers are factory set to 400°F (240°C). As a concern for safety, these units will not heat higher than 400°F (240°C). Tampering or altering the initial settings will void the warranty.

The temperature reading shown on the LED display is the core temperature of the heating element. As heat dissipates from the origin, the actual temperature of the cutting surface will likely be less (approx 350°F on a TC40 after adequate time). Temperatures may vary based on the type of tool being heated and ambient temperature and surrounding environmental factors.
